The Unexpected Volunteer

When sixteen-year-old Emma moved to a small town, she found it difficult to make friends. She had lived in a busy city all her life, where she could visit museums or meet her classmates after school. In her new town, the buses stopped running early, and most shops closed before six. One afternoon, she noticed a poster at the local library asking for volunteers to help older people learn how to use computers. Although Emma had never taught anyone before, she decided to apply.

On her first Saturday, Emma met Mr Harris, a retired photographer who wanted to send pictures to his granddaughter in another country. Emma showed him how to attach photos to an email, but he kept forgetting the steps. Instead of doing everything for him, she wrote simple instructions on a piece of paper. By the end of the morning, he had sent his first email without help. He was so pleased that he invited Emma to see some of his old photographs the following week.

After a month, Emma was spending two hours at the library every Saturday. She still missed her old friends, but she no longer felt lonely. She had also become more patient and confident. When the librarian offered her a paid summer job, Emma was surprised. She had joined the project to meet people, not to earn money. Now she was looking forward to spending the holidays in the town she had once wanted to leave.

1. What did Emma prepare to help Mr Harris remember the steps? _____
2. _____? _____
3. _____? _____
4. _____? _____
5. _____? _____
